FORT SHAFTER LOSES TEAMSTER

SEARCH BEING MADE FOR MISSING TEAMSTER

Much Target Practice Produces Efficient Marksmen—Many Re-enlisting — New Tennis Courts Completed.

Last Saturday night, time unknown, Quartermaster Teamster Doyle of Fort Shafter, disappeared with a team and a buckboard. The team was found in good condition tied to a wagon in the streets of Honolulu. Doyle has not been captured as yet. It is supposed that he has left for more remote parts of the island, but it is expected that he will be apprehended and brought to justice very soon.

Target Practice Pau.

The Marines have finished their target season at Fort Shafter with high scores and qualifications. This is the first year that the Marines have used the Fort Shafter range and they were well pleased as they had many men to qualify as Marksmen and better. The Marines have used the Craig rifle all through the season. The Fort Shafter range is used most every day of the year, as the Second Battalion of the 20th Infantry, the National Guard of Hawaii and the Marines are using it. It is also frequently used by the Navy for small arms practice. This is a good target range and has a good danger line as the mountains are in the rear and there is no traffic on either side.

Joining Army Again.

George P. Collins, who was discharged from Company F, 20th Infantry, a few days ago, has re-enlisted, been assigned and reinstated as Sergeant in his former company. Many men that are being and have been discharged at Fort Shafter are re-enlisting as the service in the Hawaiian Islands is growing better every day. There are many places in Honolulu that a soldier can go and enjoy himself and who would or could ask for a more pleasant climate or a more beautiful place.

Beautiful Lawns.

The lawns around the new officers' quarters and Company barracks are becoming very nice, and it will be but a very short time until they will be as beautiful as those around the old quarters. The soldiers of Fort Shafter are of having some of the most beautiful lawns and gardens in Honolulu. The gardens grass flowers and trees are watered daily and are always green. One hundred and twenty thousand gallons of water are used daily, and a large per cent of this water is for the gardens and lawns alone.

Golf Practice.

The men who failed to qualify last target season and the new men of Fort Shafter are being instructed for the midwinter target practice. They are being drilled in sighting and aiming drill, also gallery practice. Every man is progressing nicely and it is expected that each man will qualify.

Company G Entertains.

After the field meet at Fort Shafter Monday afternoon Company G was given a grand treat, cold drinks and sandwiches were served. Each man that had taken part in the field exercise had well earned this for each man worked hard to make his company a winner.

New Tennis Court.

The new tennis court at Fort Shafter was completed last Saturday. This is a first class court and first class work and material was used from the beginning and a better one would be hard to find. This is a sport that everybody enjoys and most everyone is interested in.

MONTGOMERY FREED FROM IRKSOME BONDS

Recent court papers report that Lucille Montgomery, wife of J. D. Montgomery of Honolulu, better known as "Monty," was granted an interlocutory divorce on the grounds of incompatibility. The community property valued at something like $27,000 was amicably settled out of court. Mrs. Montgomery was granted alimony to the amount of $100 a month pending a final decree. "Monty" Montgomery, a well known sporting man of Honolulu, sailed for the coast a short time ago on a brief business trip.

A nation-wide movement for lessening infant mortality was begun with a conference Nov. 11 and 12 at Yale university.

FORT DE RUSSY HAS RAILWAY SMASH-UP

NO ONE INJURED; ENGINE BADLY SMASHED.

Rapid Transit Superintendent Pratt Sticks to the Brakes in Face of Near Death by Collision With Engine.

An exciting runaway, which might have terminated with serious results, occurred at Ft. De Russy yesterday morning and only the rare presence of mind and the "grit to stick" in the face of extreme danger, displayed by Superintendent Pratt of the H. R. T. & L. Co. and M. Cosme, a locomotive engineer of the construction force, saved the day. An H. R. T. & L. Co. car loaded with stone was being hauled to the top of the new stone chute by means of a cable and donkey engine. Having passed safely up the steep incline, the heavy load was about to start along the level stretch of track immediately over the chute, when without a second's warning the drawhead of the car gave way and the several tons of stone, under which were well greased axles, started on a wild rush down the steep incline with Pratt and a laborer aboard. The laborer needed but a glance to convince him that the pace was out of his class and he leaped for safety. His flight through the air resembled a parachute just opening up and his sudden stop, a balloon with the gas out. Ahead of Pratt were three extremely sharp curves, so close together that they appeared like a large S. These the car took to with the joy of a bucking broncho, and the manner in which it twisted and turned around this section of track resembled the aforesaid broncho in his famous "change ends" stunt. Pratt stuck to the brakes throughout and did all in his power to avert a catastrophe until finally thrown from the car on the last curve. And now appears upon the scene the second hero. Directly ahead of the car stood the small narrow gauge Baldwin engine used on the works, and seated at the throttle was M. Cosme, fearlessly awaiting the crash that was inevitable. With rare presence of mind he started his engine with the intention of meeting the car as lightly as possible and by the use of the brakes, stop its onward flight. Twice did the car meet him and force him ahead but still he stuck and having reached the end of the track he set all brakes and jumped, thereby saving his life, for the car again meeting the engine with a tremendous crash, forced it off the track into the deep sand where it buried itself and formed a bumper that this time the car could not move, thereby bringing the runaway to a stop. What seems a miracle is the escape of Pratt and Cosme from serious injury, they having only received a few slight bruises and a bad shaking up. Had the car left the track in its wild flight, it would undoubtedly have plunged into the Post Hospital building or the quarters occupied by the families of Sergeants Winterbottom and Babel of Co. G, as these buildings are situated close by the track, in the vicinity of the sharp curves.

Superintendent Ware of the Engineer force at once put a large force of men to work clearing the wreck, which will take some time. The engine will not be used for a few days as it is sadly in need of repairs.
